It was abandoned in after major breaches occurred in and is currently disused, although there are proposals from the Barnsley Canal Consortium to restore and reopen it. The Dearne and Dove was the least profitable part of the system, with high maintenance costs as a result of subsidence from the coal mining. The idea of creating a navigable waterway from the River Don to Barnsley along the course of the River Dearne was first proposed in by the Marquess of Rockingham. Early Learning for Children. Contents 1 History 1. These were put into regenerating the area from the mid-nineties onward causing a certain amount of economic revival, and changing the character of the area to be more rural as large areas of ex-industrial land to the north of the town which were once collieries and railway marshalling yards were turned back into scrubland and countryside, dotted with light industrial and commercial office parks.
