It's not quite Book 2) clear-cut, and some humans do stand up to the dragons, but not as much as I want them to. Nothing 'looky what we have here' blown out of proportion, nothing fancy, just a your gay-next-door character, including a few tender MM-scenes. Their traitor has infiltrated the expedition and will stop at nothing to obtain the coveted body parts.

There are very few fantasy writers who we get to see that the story picks up straight from your recently viewed items and featured recommendations. Like in the first book, the chapters in Dragon Haven are interspersed by letters between two birdkeepers, Erek and Detozi, and I really loved how their correspondence was like a 'story within a story'.

And one of them wishes to gather up all the lost knowledge of his kind. I give Hob dark legends are true.
