Mama Moonlight's Wisdom for Warriors with Wounded Souls by Theresa Kahle

Join crowds of wild dancing Angels who welcome lost souls from all tribes noon under rows of steel-eyed warrior guards who stand shivering on high castle walls. to stars where Endymion plays pipes in moonlight mourning death of Florina Naked girl slides down hair of her mother who screams murdered by jealous.

their souls are bound together in flesh of child who grows inside her belly to comb long hair silver as moonlight while Jacques sits by door playing swift- running tunes Jacqueline climbs a high tree staring down at old mother and father with moon forever under petals of flowers smiling as she tends wounds of a warrior.

Wisdom I Gain I gather a thousand fragments of verse to sew a coat of many rainbow leaves stitched together by desperate ennui to keep my soul dry in wordless my father to struggle from pink flesh of my mother who teaches me how to speak to transform myself gripping reins of fate to heal all wounds and change rules.
