New variables and new agreements between 10Hz global positioning system devices in tennis drills. Our results also identified meaningful collective behaviors that suggest that changes to pitch size 1 increase in-tra-team distances and 2 have a smaller effect on older, more experienced players, although 3 these respond to changes in a less predictable way, that is, older players make the teams more adaptable, and thus, more variable, less predictable to new situations. Capturing complex, non-linear team behaviours during competitive football. The influence of scoring targets and outer-floaters on attacking and defending team dispersion, shape and creation of space during small-sided soccer games. The order of games was established randomly. Our findings could help coaches to better understand and shape tactics in teams of different ages and skill levels through simple task manipulations. SportsMed, 428: Almost in all small-sided games with exception of the SSG30 the entropy values of the variables were higher in U14 with respect to U Effects of pitch size.
